Jet Setting Styles

Beautiful items reflect passion for the private aviation lifestyle.

Aviation style is all about looking like you've arrived. It's being polished and pulled together. From your shades to your shoes. From the time you climb on board to the time you reach your destination — and beyond.

Mastering this on-the-go appearance calls for items that are not only functional, but also fashionable. Whether you're headed for a weekend at your favorite vacation spot or a week-long business trip, here are a few aviation-appropriate goodies that are both.

Handsome Horizon Look

If you've ever seen the Artificial Horizon Indicator in the cockpit, you'll instantly recognize the inspiration behind stylish bi-colored sunglasses from Nader Zadi.

As founder of CustomEyes, a New York eyewear atelier specializing in vintage and bespoke eyewear, Zadi emulates the instrument's blue for sky and brown for ground in his Horizon shades. They're available in prescription and non-prescription, in white and yellow gold. Prices for the custom made-by-hand Horizon sunglasses range from $750 to $5,000.

Cashmere Comfort

Travel in five-star comfort with an eye mask, blanket and travel bag made of super soft cashmere. Sure to make going places thrice as nice, these three cozy items are included in the RS Travel Set. The sumptuous set is part of the accessories lineup of designer Raffi Shaya, who is known for his cashmere fashions. Needless to say, the set is perfect for indulging in a little bit of luxury whether you're in the air or in the car. You may even want one at home. $500.

Time to Fly

Recently launched in the United States, high-end British brand Bremont sets its watches apart with a distinctive aviation theme. That's not surprising, given that the company is named after a famed WWII pilot and is owned by two brothers who are pilots of historic aircraft, former display pilots and aircraft restorers. All dials on Bremont watches are designed to resemble the dials in the planes flown
